Scotch Reviewers Are Known Now Chiefly From Poet They Mercilessly Abused.

One vivid impression left on the mind by the revival of the savage at Mrs. tacks by which Keats was assailed in an apothecary, bidding him go "back protesting that personal feeling towards such a person would be as out of place as towards vermin. It is difficult to understand how men who wrote in this strain could be the accepted literary censors of any age The fact is that behind this savage violence and insensibility lurked ra cial prejudice.

It was, as Byron recorded, a case of "English Bards and Scotch Review ers." The one thing that could not be forgiven to John Keats was his cockney birth. Yet time has brought in its revenges. A hundred years have gone and the only claim to remembrance of these confident Scotch reviewers is the curious interest that is reflected on them by the immortal memory of the poet whom they used so despitefully.

Monstrosity Among Newspapers. Those who object to the widespread newspaper may see the apotheosis of their bete noir in the museum at Aixla-Chapelle-the only existing copy of the "Illuminated Quadruple Constel lation," published in New York in 1859. Happily this monstrosity did not survive the first issue, for its pages meas ure eight and one half feet by six feet and each contains 13 columns, 48 inches long.

By way of comparison, it may be mentioned that the smallest newspaper in the world is the Mexican El-Telegrama, with pages four inches Equare.

Lee's First Impressions of War. Robert E. Lee, as captain of engineers, arranged the American batteries when the United States forces landed at Vera Cruz in 1847. Lee's brother, a naval lieutenant, served one of the guns, and here are Lee's first impressions of war: "Whenever I turned my eyes reverted to him, and I stood by his gun whenever I was not wanted elsewhere. Oh! I felt awfully, and am at a loss what I should have done had he been cut down be-fore me. . . He preserved his usual cheerfulness, and I could see his white teeth through all the smoke and din of the fire."
